The part that sucks about all of this is that I am horrible at those kinds of word puzzles, so I will be even more useless if cryptology turns out to be the tool needed to solve the puzzle.

You could help by going through all the posts since 2000. Find all the out of place CAP letters, numbers, missing letters, missing words, out of place words, anything out of the ordinary. Post your findings in this thread for a comparison and examination. If there is a code, we still need something to decode! Try to be sequential, make sure things are in order by date. I am curious to see what you might come up with.

I will see what I can do. I cannot promise anything, but maybe in addition to that, and my unique position in life and the world, I might find access to a cryptographer, which would be a big boon for us all.

Just a quick question...did anyone ever think about the fact that there are 26 letters in the alphabet... $26*2=52$...

Just a thought to see if I was so dumb that it took me this long to figure it out.

Well you definitely are not alone in being suspicious of Genesis. I just posted the IP evidence under the topic "What will you ask Genesis...ect" Basically there was this character by the name of Sean Hutchinson Who claimed to be getting messages from David Gilmour. But somebody noticed that both Sean's IP address and David Gilmour's IP address were the same. Then Sean tried to say he was Publius and got nailed. then Genesis popped up and he also had the same IP address as Sean. Sean even came out and admitted he was "fuckin with us" about being Publius but he firmly denied being Genesis even though they have the same IP.

draw your own conclusion.

Thanks, don't mind if I do.

to touch on a_rod_777's post, about the design of the booklet, and either the band or publius lying....

with any album, first comes the music, then recording, then packaging.

so after the music is written, let's assume 100% by the band, without any outside influence.... then comes recording and production, and artwork design and packaging, which are all certainly able to be influenced, and even completely designed, by some non-band member in whatever capacity.

Frequently album covers, inserts, t-shirts, logos, etc are 'chosen' by bands, rather than 'created' by them.... so given that this puzzle is certainly made up of more than just audio, musical components, and also has visual clues and pieces, it's certainly possible that both are telling the truth.

say the band writes album, so and so from EMI gets with the artist/design team and makes artwork,etc pertinent to the album, at the same time including enigma components. The band goes to approve or choose the artwork for the album.... what the hell do they care if it contains a puzzle or not, as long as they like it for the album.

Well just another couple thoughts along those lines.....

I'm off to rock, have a great night/weekend everyone.

J.

I know I am going to sound like a complete and total idiot, but could someone either post or direct me to the Genesis posts (the very first through the last, although I think I have the last). I might have found something, but I want to confirm it with the Genesis posts first.

I had a chance to look through everything but have run into a road block. Things feel to me like they should just be right there, like on the tip of my tongue, but I just cannot put my mind on it. So, instead I have posted some thoughts on my website:

NUM ON KEY

This is supposed to be the key, right? What are the greek letters...???

Does this have something to do with it?

Here is something to ponder: The man-made concept of time is an illusion; it does not really exist.

I always thought Genesis meant the "Num Lock" key on the keyboard.

My contention has always been that the man-made measurement of time IS a measurement of distance in relation to gravity.
